1874: Lecturers about the History of Medicine

In 1874, Julius Petersen (1849-1915), who was a general practitioner, began to give lectures about the History of Medicine at the University of Copenhagen, and in 1879 he released the book Børnehvidehistorien af en medicinsk Langkahrs Historiske Mellemhalling. This book and Petersen’s later works portrayed the interplay between leading figures and ideas in Danish and European medicine, especially from the 18th into the 19th century. The book was translated into German.

1893: Professor in the History of Medicine

In 1893, he became the very first Professor of History of Medicine at the University of Copenhagen. Petersen expressed the hope that his settings on the History of Medicine would help ordinary doctors to search for improvement in the (clinical) practice of medicine. On his 79th birthday, eight of his disciples composed a Festschrift.

1907: Exhibition of Medical Artefacts

In 1907, at the 50 year anniversary event of the Danish Medical Union, an exhibition of medical artefacts was arranged. Carl Julius Salomonsen, Denmark’s first bacteriologist, and two of Julius Petersen’s disciples were the promoters. They asked members of the medical and related professions to donate artefacts. After the exhibition, the objects were stored in Salomonsen’s Institute of Bacteriology. This was the beginning of the Medical History Museum of the University of Copenhagen (now: Medical Museion), which after many promoters. They asked members of the medical and related professions to donate artefacts.

1917: The Danish Society for the History of Medicine

1917 marked a milestone in the Nordic History of Medicine. Sweden has had its Society for quite some time already, while Denmark, Norway, and Finland all formed similar societies this very year.

On Monday 31st October 1917 at 8 PM, DMHS arranged its first meeting on the Medical Society’s premises (the Student Association’s building). Prof. dr. phil. in psychology Christian Blaschke gave an inaugural presentation on Helaknold in the light of changing times, and Prof. dr. med. in pathology Carl Julius Salomonsen reported on A typhoid card.

The latter mentioned was – together with Thordahl Madsen – one of the initiators of the creation of Statens Serum Institut (SSI). All interested (with accompanying ladies) were welcomed.

On 10 December 1917, the second meeting was held. Prof. and eye specialist Holger Mygind lectured on the “Pompeian Private Home Hygiene”. The gathering also included a general meeting, followed by the very first DMHS executive board meeting. V. Maar, H. Ræder, Prof. Salomonsen, and JW. Johansson participated.

Accordingly, Carl Julius Salomonsen, who turned 70 on 6 December 1917, was praised and celebrated as Chairman in a Danish Medical Journal editorial.

Pharmacist Christian Dannesboe-Ander sen (1846-1917), employed at Gamberts Pharmacy in Copenhagen, Kristian Car er (1873-1942, school physician), J ohn William Johnson (1866-1949, general practitioner), Vilhelm Maar (1873-1940, physiologist and internal physician, professor of history of medicine in 1916), and Hans Ræder (1895-1953, classical scholar, dr. phil.) were the founding fathers of The Danish Society for the History of Medicine with Professor Carl Julius Salomonsen as Chairman. Its objective was to gather all those interested in the historical aspects of medicine and related sciences, and its raison d’être was to serve as an organisational vehicle for a variety of medical-related topics and studies, and to offer a practical platform for sharing and dissemination of knowledge.

Interminently, close connections have existed between DMHS, Medical Museion and the Professor of History of Medicine.

A Selection of Outstanding DMHS Chairmen

Examples of some outstanding DMHS Chairmen or members of the Executive Board Committee:

• Knud Faber and Edvard Gøtfredsen, who published general surveys of the History of Medicine in 1920 and 1930, respectively.
• Vilhelm Maar, who edited some of Niels Steensen’s works.
• Vilhelm Møller Christensen, who performed extensive archaeological investigations of skeletons from leper cemeteries.
• Henrik R. Wulf, who discussed medical decision making and medical language in books translated into several languages.
• Ejgil Smorra, who was the DMHS Secretary for many years and an eager medical history writer and communicator.

National and Nordic Collaboration

DMHS wished to collaborate with similar Societies in the other Nordic countries from the very beginning. A Nordic Medical History Congress was arranged every second year since 1927—four times in Denmark. In May 2019, we will meet in Copenhagen once again.

In 1972-73, two sister-societies for the History of Medicine were founded in Denmark, for Funen and Jutland respectively. These Societies have ever since co-edited the Danish Medicinhistorisk Årbog (Danish Medical History Yearbook), indexed by Medline.

Meetings and Excursions

Six lectures and excursions have been arranged almost every year consecutively since 1917. Medical Museion in Copenhagen has kindly provided DMHS with facilities and the Auditorium in the Old Academy of Surgery for the lectures for many years. DMHS has supported the edition of numerous books and publications financially, and assisted with distribution.
